

Americans Projected To Eat A Record-Breaking 1.45 Billion Chicken Wings Tonight For The Super Bowl

From Unparalleled Suffering

February 2023

Humans care far more about entertainment happening in sports stadiums than violence occurring in slaughterhouses. They seem quite passionate about the former and completely apathetic about the latter.

According to the 2023 Chicken Wing Report by the National Chicken Council, American citizens are projected to consume 1.45 billion chicken wings tonight for the most-watched sports event of the year. The NCC states that this would be 84 million more wings compared to last year's dead bird consumption during the Super Bowl. Our minds are too limited to be able to comprehend large numbers, but the NCC helps us put this scale of consumption in perspective. They state:

1.45 billion wings laid end to end would stretch from GEHA Field at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo. to Lincoln Financial Field in Philadelphia, Pa. about 62 times.

How do people read something like this and not find it disturbing?

The National Chicken Council educates their readers about the number of wings that humans in a nation that only makes up 4% of the global population will consume tonight, but they don't talk about how many individual chickens those wings represent or anything else about the chickens, such as their age when they are killed, the conditions they were forced to live in, and what types of tortures they must endure on their way to the killing factory and inside the killing factory.

If 1.45 billion chicken wings do get consumed tonight that will mean that Americans ate around 725 million individual chickens. Just in a single evening and in just one country that represents "liberty and justice for all." What a joke.

When I used to work at a grocery store as a cashier, whenever someone would purchase a rotisserie chicken I would always ask them if they want the baby chicken in a bag. Sometimes people would look puzzled or ask "baby bird?" and I'd explain to them that the bird they are buying is an overgrown genetically altered dead baby who was killed at or around 42-days-old. All that the majority of people care about when it comes to purchasing animals is the cost and the taste. I don't recall anyone changing their mind about buying a dead baby bird because after all it's the "normal" and "natural" thing to do.

NEW - WHO's Tedros says we "must prepare" for a potential H5N1 human bird flu pandemic.

Just days ago the World Health Organization warned that we should start preparing for a potential H5N1 bird flu pandemic as the avian influenza outbreak that has been ripping through birds for over a year now has allegedly started jumping to several different mammal species. This came days after the US government announced that the Covid “national health emergency” will arbitrarily end on May 11th.

I predicted in the beginning of Covid that we were in motion to be living with constant pandemics, whether real or not and whether naturally occurring or not. A society that can accept living amidst endless wars can also accept living amidst constant pandemics. Pandemics are great for business and so are wars.

We ordinary citizens must “prepare” for a potential flu pandemic while chicken exploiters who tightly confine thousands of unhealthy and fearful birds together go about business as usual, breeding unfathomable numbers of chickens into existence and placing them in situations that are nothing short of a recipe for disaster.

We shouldn’t forget about or be ignorant to the fact that scientists are creating bird viruses in laboratories, essentially manipulating viruses into novel forms that would otherwise not exist and then making them far more dangerous to humans. In my opinion, there is no plausible reason to believe that the people behind these psychotic endeavors wouldn’t unleash any of these viruses deliberately. Either way, even in the case of an accident, the accident couldn’t have happened if we didn’t engage in and allow such lunacy in the first place.

Remember all the things we were told to do for the greater good? Funny how “doing our part” never has anything to do with prevention at the source, such as not farming animals.

I can’t help but laugh at our species. We are beyond ridiculous. Doing the bare minimum for our fellow species and leaving them alone is the last thing most humans can get onboard with. The idea that “everyone is against factory farming” like I’ve heard so many other vegan activists say is complete nonsense. The vast majority of humans will accept any level of mistreatment towards other animals as long as the end result brings them some level of personal satisfaction.

I believe that most humans know right vs. wrong, but I don’t think having an idea of what’s right vs. wrong has much of an influence on the decision making for most people. Imagine enjoying a football game without participating in consuming dead bodies we have no need for? Is that too much to ask, should we stop trying to force our beliefs down our peoples throats?

EAT
WHAT
LOVE

After meeting and getting to know many chickens over the years I have no problem admitting that I have much more respect for chickens than I do for humans. I'm one of those weirdos that cares more about the life of a bird than the outcome of a ball game. Chickens are far more compassionate, courageous, authentic, rational, and adaptive to their surroundings. Humans on the other hand by and large are frankly pathetic and a colossal embarrassment. We can't even begin to consider giving up something we know causes so much suffering, illness, and pandemic potential.

Although there will be a winner of tonight's Super Bowl game, it really doesn't matter. As a species we are not winning- we are failing ourselves, other animals, and the planet we all call home. We are failing miserably. There will be hell to pay for the nightmare we've inflicted onto trillions of innocent animals and I will not feel one bit sad about it. We can only keep distracting ourselves with professional sports games and chomping down on corpses for so long before reality catches up smacks us in the face.
